3	12:23	NEWS 1 - Melting the moon to build housing

June marks an exciting milestone in space exploration as a four-person crew is set to enter a 3D printed building at NASA's Johnson Space Center in Houston, Texas. The structure, called Mars Dune Alpha, was created using a slurry that resembled soft-serve ice cream before it dried. Designed by architecture firm BIG-Bjarke Ingels Group and 3D printed by Icon Technology, the 150m2 space will serve as a testing ground for physical and behavioural health challenges that astronauts will encounter during long-term stays in space. However, Mars Dune Alpha is more than just a testing facility. It is the first structure built for a NASA mission by the Moon to Mars Planetary Autonomous Construction Technology (MMPACT) team. This team is currently preparing for the first construction projects on a planetary body beyond Earth, which will be crucial for future space exploration.

The experiments conducted inside Mars Dune Alpha will focus on the impact of long-term space residencies on human health. With plans to return to the moon as part of NASA's Artemis program, understanding these challenges is essential for the success and safety of future astronauts. The structure features crew quarters, shared living spaces, and dedicated areas for administering medical care and growing food, providing a realistic environment for testing.

The colour of Martian soil inspired the design of Mars Dune Alpha, giving the structure an otherworldly feel. But it's not just the design that's groundbreaking; the use of 3D printing technology is also a significant achievement. This innovative approach to construction could revolutionise the way we think about building structures in space.

The Moon to Mars Planetary Autonomous Construction Technology (MMPACT) team is currently developing autonomous construction robots that will be used for future construction projects. These robots will be capable of building structures using materials found on the moon and Mars, reducing the need for resources to be transported from Earth. This will make space exploration more sustainable and cost-effective.

STINGER	NEWS 2 - Netflix account sharing block now hits Australia

Netflix's recent announcement of their crackdown on password sharing in Australia has sparked a lot of discussion and debate amongst users. After months of testing and launches in other parts of the world, the company has finally decided to implement this measure in Australia. From Wednesday this week, Netflix's Australian customers will receive an email outlining the changes to the platform's use of IP addresses to determine which devices are at the main household and which are in another location. This move is a blow to the many families who share Netflix login details and passwords with their older parents or children who have recently moved out of home. Similarly, there are many users who share passwords purely to split the cost of a Netflix account each month.

In response to this change, a new "Extra member" option is being offered to users on the Standard or Premium plans. This option will allow one or two (depending on the plan) users to have cheaper access to their own Netflix account. An Extra member account will cost $7.99 per month.

While this move by Netflix has stirred up controversy, it's important to understand the reasoning behind it. The company has been losing millions of dollars due to password sharing, which is a common practice among Netflix users. By cracking down on password sharing, Netflix hopes to increase its subscription revenue and provide a better user experience for its paying customers.

It's also worth noting that Netflix is not the only streaming service to take this approach. In fact, many other platforms have already implemented similar measures to prevent password sharing. This includes Disney+, which launched with strict rules around password sharing and limits to the number of devices that can be used on a single account.

STINGER	NEWS 3 - Fast Food tunnel delivery
----------------	---

This possibly should have featured in the Tech Absurd, but it's real and happening now, so...

Wendy's, the popular fast-food chain, is taking the concept of convenience to a whole new level with its latest innovation.

Recently, they started using AI chatbots at drive-thrus which seems to be successful thus far...

...but now, Wendy's has teamed up with Pipedream, an autonomous logistics company, to create an underground delivery system for online order pickups. The system is currently being piloted, and if successful, it could revolutionise the way we pick up food orders.

The system works by using robots to transport online food orders from Wendy's kitchens through tunnels to "Instant Pickup portals" located beside parking spaces. When a customer arrives at their designated space, they talk to the restaurant crew through the Instant Pickup portal's speaker to confirm their order. An autonomous robot then travels through the tunnels to deliver the food directly to the customer's parking space.

One of the most significant advantages of this delivery system is that it eliminates the need for customers to go inside the restaurant or wait at a drive-thru to pick up their order. Instead, the food is brought directly to them, saving them time and hassle. Moreover, the use of temperature-controlled delivery technology ensures that the food is delivered at the right temperature, preventing it from getting cold or too warm while in transit.

Crazy but cool, maybe...

SONG	The Animals - House Of The Rising Sun 1905 / 1964 "The House of the Rising Sun" is a traditional folk song, sometimes called "Rising Sun Blues". It tells of a person's life gone wrong in the city of New Orleans. Many versions also urge a sibling or parents and children to avoid the same fate. The most successful commercial version was recorded in 1964 by the British rock band The Animals. "House of Rising Sun" was said to have been known by American miners in 1905.[5] The oldest published version of the lyrics is that printed by Robert Winslow Gordon in 1925. Writer Ralph McLean of the BBC is quoted as having said it was "arguably the first folk rock tune" and "a revolutionary single", after which "the face of modern music was changed forever."

W App - Anonymous Polls

A variant of the Gas App released in 2022 - The popular new app is meant to "gas up" friends and boost self-esteem through anonymous polls.

As a parent, keeping your children safe is likely a top priority. With technology constantly evolving, it's important to be aware of the potential dangers that come with it. One app that has gained popularity among parents and kids is the anonymous polls app... However, it's important to understand that sharing kids' details on this app can make it a gateway for predators. The anonymous poles app allows users to create polls and share them anonymously with others. While this may seem harmless, it's important to consider the potential risks that come with anonymity. When users are anonymous, it can make it easier for predators to target children and gather information about them.

This app has recently gained popularity among parents to share their children's details, such as their school, age, and interests with a view to making friends and breaking down barriers to friendships. However, this can be dangerous as it provides predators with easy access to information about potential victims. Predators can use this information to target children and gain their trust by pretending to share similar interests.

Additionally, the anonymous nature of the app makes it difficult for parents to monitor their children's activity on the app. Without knowing who is behind each poll, it's impossible to know who your child is interacting with. This lack of monitoring can put your child at risk of being exposed to inappropriate content or interactions with strangers.

It's crucial for parents to understand the potential risks of sharing their children's details on the anonymous poles app. While it may seem like a harmless way to share information, it can quickly become a gateway for predators. Instead, parents should focus on using safer forms of communication and social media that allow for more control and monitoring.

What's for dinner tonight? How about a piece of 3D-printed, laser-cooked cake? Yes, you heard that right. Thanks to the researchers at Columbia University School of Engineering, we may soon be able to enjoy personalised meals made using 3D printing technology. The team at Columbia University has created a device that can construct a seven-ingredient cheesecake using food inks and then cook it to perfection using a laser. The result is a delectable piece of cake that contains banana, jam, peanut butter, and Nutella. Sounds mouth-watering, doesn't it?

This cutting-edge technology has the potential to revolutionise the food industry. Imagine being able to create personalised meals for everyone, from professional athletes to patients with dietary conditions. It could also be useful for those who are simply short on time.

What's particularly intriguing about this technology is that it can create complex structures that would otherwise be difficult to achieve using traditional cooking methods. The 3D printer can create intricate designs and patterns, allowing for a whole new level of creativity in the kitchen.

The device works by using food inks that are loaded into individual cartridges, similar to the ones used in conventional 3D printers. The inks are then deposited layer by layer onto a surface, creating the desired structure. Once the food has been printed, a laser is used to cook the dish to perfection.

'The main ones which will be dropped after Friday night will be the Beatles' 'Let It Be', the Axiom (an Australian pop group) record 'A Little Ray of Sunshine'..."[
