SONG	Elvis Presley - Hound Dog 0s Elvis Presley's Monkey Presley had a host of pets, but none were so dear to him as his chimpanzee, Scatter. Reportedly, Scatter had a lot of fun lifting the skirts of girls around him and generally wreaking havoc wherever Presley took him (which was everywhere). Eventually, he became too rowdy for even his owner to take on tour, and had to be sent back to stay at Graceland, Presley's Tennessee estate, where he remained for the rest of his days.

3	12:23	NEWS 1 - Bunnings Robots

Bunnings, the leading hardware and home improvement retailer in Australia, is taking a step forward in retail technology by trialling a retail tech robot made by Zippedi. The robot is designed to do night-time rounds of stores, scanning aisles and shelves for out-of-stock items. This is part of Bunnings' broader program of work to make in-store processes more efficient. During a strategy briefing day held by parent Wesfarmers, Bunnings' Managing Director, Michael Schneider, revealed the trial. He explained that the robots aim to optimise the store's space and stock replenishment with overnight aisle scanning. In addition, Schneider also said that Bunnings is aiming to reduce team member hours spent locating hand stock to be filled, or completing shelf gap and price checks.

The trial of Zippedi's robot is an exciting move for Bunnings, which is known for its customer-centric approach to retail. By using technology like this, the retailer can create a more efficient and streamlined shopping experience for customers. The robot will be able to identify out-of-stock items quickly, allowing staff to restock shelves with the products customers need.

STINGER	NEWS 2 - AI in Australian Schools

The Australian House of Representatives Standing Committee on Employment, Education and Training has recently launched an inquiry into the use of generative artificial intelligence in the Australian education system. This inquiry is set to explore the opportunities and challenges presented by generative AI and its impact on early childhood education, schools, and higher education sectors. The use of artificial intelligence in education is not new. With advancements in technology, AI has become increasingly accessible to educators and students. From AI-powered chatbots that help students with their coursework to personalised learning programs that adapt to each student's specific needs, AI has proved to be a valuable tool in the education sector.

Generative AI, in particular, is a form of AI that is trained on large datasets to generate new and unique content. For example, generative AI can be used to create essays, poems, or even music. The potential for generative AI in education is vast, with the possibility of creating personalised learning plans based on student's individual learning styles.

However, as with any new technology, there are also concerns about the impact of generative AI on the education system. Some worry that generative AI may replace human teachers, while others are concerned about issues of bias and discrimination in the data used to train these systems.

In light of these concerns, the inquiry launched by the Australian House of Representatives Standing Committee on Employment, Education and Training is a much-needed step towards ensuring that the use of generative AI in education is safe and beneficial for all students. Submissions from educators, experts, and concerned citizens are being called for, and hearings will be held in the coming months.

The inquiry is an opportunity for educators and other stakeholders to voice their opinions and provide insights into the opportunities and challenges presented by generative AI. It is also an opportunity for the Australian education system to take a proactive approach towards the integration of AI, ensuring that it is used in a way that benefits students and teachers alike.

STINGERNEWS 3 - Sextortion

Reports of "sextortion" to the eSafety Commissioner have surged to an alarming level in the first quarter of 2023, with young men being the most vulnerable victims. In the first three months of 2023, the eSafety Commissioner reported that the number of reports of blackmail using sexual images and videos has tripled. This is an alarming increase, and it is even more worrying that the victims are young men who are being coerced and extorted by criminals. Sextortion is a type of online extortion that involves criminals soliciting sexual images and videos from victims to use to blackmail them and extort money. It is a deplorable crime that preys on the vulnerability of the victim. The platforms on which the most incidents reported to the commissioner occurred were Instagram and Snapchat. This highlights the need for these platforms to take stronger action to protect their users, particularly the young, from being victimised by criminals.

The eSafety Commissioner has warned that paying criminals only results in more extortion. It is important to note that giving in to the demands of the extortionists only emboldens them to continue with their vile activities. Reporting such incidents to the authorities is the best course of action, as they have the necessary tools to track down the perpetrators and bring them to justice.

STINGERNEWS 4 - Phone Plans to go up

Australians are no strangers to rising costs of living, and unfortunately, the latest news from telecommunications giant Telstra is set to make things even more difficult. As of July 4, Telstra will be increasing the price of its phone packages by $3-6 per month, impacting all postpaid and mobile data plans. This means that Australians will soon be paying up to $72 more per year for their mobile phone plan. While Telstra has cited the annual consumer price index as the reason for the hike, many customers will undoubtedly be left feeling frustrated and concerned about the impact this will have on their budgets.

Telstra small business executive Brad Whitcomb has acknowledged that price rises can be hard for some people, especially when cost of living pressures are already high. However, he has also emphasised that the company is responding to increasing costs and wants to be clear on why this decision was made.

For those who are feeling the strain of this price hike, it's important to know that support is available. Telstra has a range of options for customers who need assistance, including payment extensions and financial hardship programs. It's important to reach out and explore these options if you're struggling to keep up with your phone bill.

Telstra is not the only game in town and as with most things, it will pay to shop around.

SONG

Al Stewart - Year Of The Cat 1976 32s

The track is noted for its lengthy instrumental sections—over four minutes of the 6:40 album version is instrumental, including a long, melodic series of solos that encompass cello, violin, piano, acoustic guitar, distorted electric guitar, synthesizer and saxophone. Tim Renwick plays both the acoustic lead and electric lead and George Ford plays bass. They added the alto saxophone part of the song—and by doing so transformed the original folk concept into the jazz-influenced ballad that put Al Stewart onto the charts.

Any child would dream of donning an Iron Man suit to become a hero for a day. And many workers involved in heavy lifting would also love to get their hands on similar technology.

Fortunately, what once was constrained to the realm of science-fiction is steadily becoming a reality with technological projects such as the one heralded by Sarcos Robotics, an American company developing robotic systems for work environments. The company recently launched its new exoskeleton for construction workers and other heavy industries.

Going by the name of Guardian XO, it promises stunning features that bring the power of machines and human intelligence and mobility together.

The Guardian XO exoskeleton is a groundbreaking innovation that has the potential to revolutionise the way heavy lifting and construction work is done. It is a wearable, full-body exoskeleton that provides the operator with superhuman strength, endurance and agility. It is designed to help workers lift and move heavy objects with ease, reducing the risk of injuries and increasing productivity.

The exoskeleton is made of lightweight materials that are comfortable to wear, even for extended periods of time. It has hydraulic actuators that amplify the operator's movements, allowing them to lift objects weighing up to 200 pounds with minimal effort. The Guardian XO also has built-in sensors that provide the operator with real-time feedback on their movements and posture, ensuring that they are using the exoskeleton in the most efficient and safe way possible.

Incidentally, Ford has the EksoVest used in its car factories and LG has the CLOi SuitBot aimed at helping people with muscular problems and arthrosis (osteoarthritis).

A paralyzed man can walk thanks again to AI.

Swiss scientists have recently helped a paralyzed man regain control over his lower body with the help of AI.

They created a "digital bridge" between the mans brain and spinal cord, bypassing injuries and allowing him to walk again.

The researchers captured the man's thoughts and, using an AI "thought decoder," translated them into spinal cord stimulation, reestablishing voluntary movement again.

He's shown signs of neurological recovery, walking with the implant turned off!

Dear Intern, when I was 25 I made a PDF assigning each employee to the Muppet they reminded me of the most. I meant to send it to my work friend, but I accidentally sent it to the entire company. My supervisor (Beaker) wanted to fire me, but the owners (Bert & Ernie) intervened.

Dear Intern, as a young lawyer I proof read a legal brief and filed it with the court. I caught a typo and blindly used the global find and replace function. Pro tip: don't do that. My brief argued for the rights of "the panties." Not "the parties." All 50 pages of it. 🙈🍷🍷

Go look up the "Dear Intern" trend on Twitter. It's people all admitting their mistakes and noting they're still present/successful. It's so heartwarming, and I wish society would look more kindly on mistakes in general. We're all humans, not robots. Well, for now, anyway.
